

Combating Online Hate in Schools: What to Know, What to Do.

A FREE PD at the MUSEUM OF TOLERANCE

May 24, 2019
9:00-5:00

Social media and online gaming are crossing geographical and community boundaries and exposing young people to increasingly harmful messages of hate. Educators are uniquely positioned to address this growing problem, yet there are challenging difficult conversations and a generation gap in media use that impede open exchange. The MOT invites participation of all caring adults in school communities- including support staff, SROs, classroom teachers, coaches- to join together to examine the issues and find solutions.

In this one-day Institute you will:

- Learn from visiting national experts about the latest research and promising practices from across the country
- Meet and hear Tim Zaal, a former White Supremacist, who educates on warning signs
- Be oriented to a new free program created by the MOT that empowers students to decode and reject online hate
- Receive free resources created by renowned NGOs in the field that support every member of a school team
- Experience a custom Museum tour and Dialogue with fellow educators and school professionals

Lunch and Coffee are included. There is free parking in the Museum.

Ultimately, this program will equip educators with ways to begin and maintain critical conversations between adults and students re. online safety and negating hate which can lead to increased student trust with adults, resiliency, and safer campuses.

*Participants will receive a certificate of completion and are eligible for graduate level extension credit from the University of San Diego.
