

Join us at the Museum of Tolerance on Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. Day for a

FREE PD for Los Angeles educators

JANUARY 21, 2019

8:30AM – 5:00PM

RACE IN THE CLASSROOM: AMERICA TO ME

In Partnership with Participant Media & the Disruptive Equity Education Project (DEEP)

School communities are at the heart of national conversations about racial injustice and equity movements for all. Students need to be able to talk about and address the historical roots of discrimination as well as their lived experiences of race in America today. The “America to Me,” docu-series opens the doors to a high school outside of Chicago, where students and teachers struggle to navigate crucial issues of race, identity, and education. Perfect for PreK-12 teachers, administrators, counselors, support staff and all school professionals, participants will gain an orientation of the series, motivation, tools, and proven best practices.

Offered in the MOT’s experiential setting, the day includes:

- Customized museum experience and group dialogue
- Lunch and coffee
- A workshop led by Dr. Darnisa Amante that explores select episodes of “America to Me” and offers tools, resources and strategies for educators to advance race and equity conversations in their schools.

Dr. Amante is an educational and racial equity strategist deeply committed to the study of culture; innovation; and adult development. She is the President/CoFounder of The Disruptive Equity Education Project (DEEP) and a system level leadership lecturer at Harvard’s Graduate School of Education.

We are excited to offer a simultaneous MLK Day Youth Camp

Cost is / $15 per child for the day and includes lunch. For more information visit:
www.museumoftolerance.com/MLKDayYouthCamp

Register here: www.museumoftolerance.com/americanatome